- Natural Sciences (and Scientific Reasoning)

SUNY Transfer Paths

Broome has listed this a core course in the following categories:

BIO 111 | General Biology I 0 to 4 credits ⓘ

To give non-science majors a working foundation of biology using principles of evolution and ecology as unifying themes. Topics include a working nature of science, evolution, and ecology including current environmental problems. Evolutionary processes and ecological adaptations will be illustrated by local successional patterns and diversity of trees. The laboratory includes physically demanding field trips. Accommodations can be made for students with disabilities.

Credits: 4
Hours: 3 Lecture Hours, 3 Clinical Hours

Course Profile
Learning Outcomes of the Course:
Upon successful completion of this course the student will be able to:

1. Apply knowledge of evolution and natural selection to explain the unity and diversity of life.
2. Field identify 40 trees common to the northeastern forest community.
3. Using examples - list, discuss, and compare the various ecological levels of life on our planet and how human activities are placing these in danger.
4. Identify the general patterns of succession in our local area and their connection to ecology and historical land usage.
